

About Biff Mitchell

Biff Mitchell was born in Toronto, Ontario about a thousand years ago. He survived street gangs at The Loop and in Winnipeg and spent three years in Germany making more than is soldier father by selling duty free cigarettes, coffee and booze on the black market. He and his brother left Germany just before the Spanish Mafia caught up with them for ripping them off for over 10,000 DM.

Biff has lived off and on for the balance of his life in and around Fredericton, New Brunswick where he fell in love (repeatedly ... as an excuse to write poetry), finished college (by a hair), and survived (barely) a quarter century (off and on) in the IT industry.

In the hear and now, he works for a software company, teaches a fiction writing workshop at the UNB College of Extended Learning, and writes novels and short stories. He finished his first Olympic level triathlon in July 2005. He almost lived through the event. In the Winter of 2005, he served as international spokesperson for Read an eBook Week and helped Rumania to start an ebook industry.

Biff has had publishers in England, USA, Australia and Canada. His publishing credits include three novels, a book of short stories, two books of poems, and a book on marketing for writers. His short stories have been published in Voyage Magazine, Rose & Thorn, and Projected Letters among others.

This is what Biff Mitchell looks like after 35 years of waiting for the Spanish Mafia to catch up to him and ask for their 10,000 + DM back ...with interest.
